

Version 1.0 | Last updated 01 March 2016

Bauer, Max

By Mahon Murphy

Bauer, Max Hermann
German Colonel, Artillery Expert, Military Adviser
Born 31 January 1869 in Quedlinburg, Germany
Died 06 May 1929 in Shanghai, China

Max Bauer was a German artillery expert and a key subordinate in the German Supreme Command. A loyal supporter of Ludendorff, Bauer intrigued against Falkenhayn and consistently pushed for the further militarisation of German everyday life. He played a role in the Kapp-Putsch and died in Shanghai in 1929.

Table of Contents

- 1 Early Career and relationship with Ludendorff
- 2 Tactical Innovation
- 3 Political Views
- 4 Post-War Career
- 5 China
- Selected Bibliography
- Citation

Early Career and relationship with Ludendorff

Colonel Max Bauer (1869-1929), born in Quedlinburg, Germany, was a militarily gifted political adventurer who was not reluctant to use radical means to serve reactionary purposes. His career began in 1888 with the Second Prussian Foot Artillery (Danzig) and he was appointed to the General Staff in 1905. He served continuously in the Operations Section of the German Supreme Command from August 1914 to October 1918. He had a long professional relationship with General Erich

Ludendorff \(1865-1937\) and was one of his most trusted advisers in handling relations between the army and the civil authorities and industrialists.

Tactical Innovation

Bauer was a specialist in heavy artillery and sieges, receiving an honorary PhD from the University of Berlin in 1915 for his work on the development of 17-inch howitzers. His theory on the hurricane bombardment of fortresses followed by infantry attacks was deployed at Liege, Antwerp and in the Vistula. He was an astute tactician who was very aware of the significance of the development of tanks. His main task in the Operations Section during the war was the in organizing the supply of munitions and equipment, particularly in creating the munitions supply programme known as the "Hindenburg Programme". Through his close connections to Fritz Haber \(1868-1934\) Bauer was one of the driving forces behind the introduction of poison gas to the battlefield in 1915. After August of 1916 he was the most important of Paul von Hindenburg \(1847-1934\) and Ludendorff's subordinates in the Supreme Command.

Political Views

Bauer was politically active, radically anti-Semitic, viewed democracy as the root of Germany's problems and took the Social Democrats' support for peace as a sign of their infiltration by international elements. He described German Jews as shirkers and claimed they were responsible for the crumbling strength of the German army. Before the war, he played a significant role in agitation for more troops and technical improvements of Germany's armed forces. In 1916 he intrigued against the Supreme Commander Erich von Falkenhayn \(1861-1922\) and was a loyal supporter of Ludendorff. He constantly pushed for all questions related to the war economy to be placed under the authority of the Supreme Command and his calls for the militarisation of civilian life became more outspoken. To this end and in conjunction with the "Hindenburg Programme" he sought to gain control over the German labour force. Additionally he supported the opening of unrestricted submarine warfare, but doubted its effectiveness in stopping the shipments of American troops to Europe. Towards the end of the war he fully supported the Dolchstosslegende, the idea that Germany's armed forces had been stabbed in the back by political actors in Berlin away from the frontlines.

Post-War Career

After the war Bauer joined the Nationale Vereinigung, a group instrumental in organising the Kapp Putsch in March 1920. Surprisingly, Bauer's political views leaned towards an alliance or understanding with Soviet Russia as a necessary starting point for the revision of the Treaty of Versailles. After the Putsch Bauer fled to Austria and later Hungary and did not return to Germany until 1925. During this time in exile he visited Russia in 1922 in order to coordinate post-Rappallo Russo-German military talks.

China

Bauer, in lieu of the ageing Ludendorff, went to China in 1927 to become military advisor to Chiang Kai-Shek \(1887-1975\) and assisted the reorganisation of the Nationalist Army. He is supposed to have drawn up campaign plans for the National Army's Northern Expedition. Bauer helped to create closer military contacts between Germany and China before his death in 1929.

Mahon Murphy, Trinity College Dublin

Section Editor: Mark Jones

Selected Bibliography

Bauer, Max: Der grosse Krieg in Feld und Heimat, Charleston 2012: Nabu Press.

Fox, John P.: Max Bauer. Chiang Kai-Shek's first German military adviser, in: Journal of Contemporary History 5/4, 1970, pp. 21-44.

Kitchen, Martin: Militarism and the development of fascist ideology. The political ideas of Colonel Max Bauer, 1916–18, in: Central European History 8/3, 1975, pp. 199-200.

Stevenson, David: 1914-1918. The history of the First World War, London 2004: Allen Lane.

Vogt, Adolf: Oberst Max Bauer. Generalstabsoffizier im Zwielficht, 1869-1929, Osnabrück 1974: Biblio-Verlag.

Watson, Alexander: Ring of steel. Germany and Austria-Hungary at war, 1914-1918, London 2014: Allen Lane.

Wette, Wolfram: The Wehrmacht. History, myth, reality, Cambridge 2006: Harvard University Press.

Wette, Wolfram: Die Wehrmacht. Feindbilder, Vernichtungskrieg, Legenden, Frankfurt a. M. 2002: S. Fischer.

Citation

Murphy, Mahon: Bauer, Max , in: 1914-1918-online. International Encyclopedia of the First World War, ed. by Ute Daniel, Peter Gatrell, Oliver Janz, Heather Jones, Jennifer Keene, Alan Kramer, and Bill Nasson, issued by Freie Universität Berlin, Berlin 2016-03-01. DOI: 10.15463/ie1418.10846.

License

This text is licensed under: CC by-NC-ND 3.0 Germany - Attribution, Non-commercial, No

Derivative Works.