

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire

By Mathieu Panoryia

Joseph Joffre (1852-1931)

Joseph Joffre served as commander-in-chief of the French forces on the Western Front until 1916.

Agence Rol: Général Joffre, black-and-white photograph, n.p., 1914; source: Gallica, Bibliothèque nationale de France, Rol, 42242, <https://gallica.bnf.fr/ark:/12148/btv1b69316714>.

This image has been identified as public domain.

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire

French general and statesman

Born 14 January 1852 in Rivesaltes, France

Died 03 January 1931 in Paris, France

Summary

Joseph Joffre was commander-in-chief of the French army at the beginning of the First World War, which was supposed to be short. He fought to stop German progression and maintain the war effort in France over time. Despite being idolized by the people of France, he was removed from his positions at the end of 1916 due to a mixed record of success.

Table of contents

1 A colonial officer of the French Republic

2 At the head of the Army (1911-1916)

2.1 From preparations for war to practice

2.2 A global vision of the conflict

2.3 French dissensions

3 Disgrace or apotheosis?

4 Selected Archives:

Selected Bibliography

Citation

A colonial officer of the French Republic

Born in Rivesaltes, southern France, Joseph Joffre (1852-1931) entered the prestigious École Polytechnique in 1869, the youngest student of his year. In 1870, the Franco-Prussian War interrupted his classes and he was called to command an artillery battery in Paris. He was, however, never involved in action. A year later, he refused to take part in the Commune. After the second siege of Paris, he went back to his classes. He was a brilliant student and after graduating joined the Engineer Corps, where he became a specialist in fortifications and railways. He helped build several forts in mainland France, before applying his expertise, with great success, during the French colonial expeditions in Taiwan, Tonkin, Mali, and Madagascar. He oversaw the building of the naval base of Diego-Suarez under the command of General Joseph Gallieni \(1849-1916\). Afterwards, he was made a general himself and obtained key posts in Paris.

At the head of the Army (1911-1916)

From preparations for war to practice

After fifteen years of political and military affairs and crises (such as the Dreyfus Affair, Fachoda, the Affaire des Fiches, and the First Moroccan Crisis), Joffre was named chief of the general staff during the particularly complicated Agadir Crisis (1911). The army remained on guard against politicians as Joffre reshaped the strategic orientation of the institution, exchanging high general officers and developing Plan XVII for the mobilization and concentration of French troops. After the declaration of war in 1914, the subsequent offensives of Plan XVII in Alsace and Moselle (then part of the German Empire) failed completely. Nonetheless, Joffre managed to convert his retreating army into a counter-attacking one, and was able to stop the German advance at the battle of the Marne, before the war stagnated after the “Race to the Sea” between September and October 1914. He is often credited with the line “I don’t know who won the battle of the Marne, but I know who would have lost it”.

A global vision of the conflict

Joffre understood the importance of the common Allied effort to end the war, which was one of the reasons why he launched several French attacks on the Western Front, whereas the Germans mainly maintained defensive positions while successfully attacking on the Eastern Front. The need for a more coherent scheme forced Joffre to organize the first Chantilly Conference with all Allied commanders at his general headquarters (6-8 December 1915). He persuaded them of the importance that the main offensive be led by the French and the British forces at the Somme, while the other allies should attack the Central Powers at the same time. However, preparations for this plan were undermined when the Germans launched an offensive at Verdun on 21 February 1916.

French dissensions

In the first months of the conflict, as Paris was threatened by the German advance, the French government withdrew to Bordeaux. At the time, Joffre and the GQG ensured that the total war was running smoothly. As the war continued, Joffre increasingly came under attack by both the political class – Aristide Briand, Georges Clémenceau \(1841-1929\), parliamentary and senatorial commissions- as well as by generals in the military such as Gallieni and Maurice Sarrail \(1856-1929\). He was accused of “caesarism” and was attacked for the way he conducted operations. The German offensive at Verdun and the capture of Fort Douaumont by a handful of Brandenburg soldiers revealed French unpreparedness. In need of guns and soldiers for the Second Battle of Champagne, the commander in chief had emptied all French fortifications. Verdun was emptied and ill-prepared for the assault, even though the stronghold was situated on the very frontline. In an effort to meet the scandal head-on, Joffre was forced to let go of one of his most ardent supporters in the army, General Augustin Dubail \(1851-1934\). He had already lost his main political ally in October 1915, the Minister of War Alexandre Millerand \(1859-1943\). His days as commander in chief were numbered.

Disgrace or apotheosis?

Even though Joffre was idolized by the people of France, he was discredited by the disappointing results at the Somme and on the Balkan Front in 1916. He was the first general to be named Marshal of the IIIrd Republic in December of 1916. He was later given a diplomatic mission to the United States, while General Robert Nivelle \(1856-1924\) took command of the French armies on the Western Front. Even after the end of the war, he remained a very popular figure and led the victory parade of 14 of July 1919 on the Champs Élysées. He remains a controversial figure: victor of the Marne for some, others see him as responsible for mass slaughters. Nevertheless, it is undeniable that he played a major role in the final victory of the Allies during the First World War.

Mathieu Panoryia, Université de Lorraine

Selected Archives:

-Service Historique de la Défense, Vincennes :

GR 9 YD 408 : personnel file

GR 14 N 1 to 47 : as commander-in-chief

GR 1 K 268 : additional archives for Joffre as commander-in-chief

- Student file at École Polytechnique : VI2A2 (1871)

- Archives Nationales, Paris, Légion d'Honneur : LH/1368/55

Selected Bibliography

- Doughty, Robert A.: Pyrrhic victory. French strategy and operations in the Great War, Cambridge; London, 2008: Harvard University Press.
- Greenhalgh, Elizabeth: The French army and the First World War, Cambridge, 2014: Cambridge University Press.
- Joffre, Joseph: Mémoires du maréchal Joffre 1910-1917, Paris, 1932: Plon.
- Porte, Rémy: Joffre, Paris, 2016: Perrin.
- Zeller, Léon: Souvenirs sur le maréchal Joffre et le général de Castelnau, Paris, 2020: Economica.

Citation

Mathieu Panoryia: Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire, in: 1914-1918-online. International Encyclopedia of the First World War, ed. by Ute Daniel, Peter Gatrell, Oliver Janz, Heather Jones, Jennifer D. Keene, Alan Kramer, and Bill Nasson, issued by Freie Universität Berlin, Berlin 2021-03-02. DOI: 10.15463/ie1418.11514

External Links

- Alexandre, R.: Avec Joffre d'Agadir à Verdun, Paris 1932 \(Gallica\) \(Book\)
- Benjamin, René: Le Maréchal Joffre, Paris 1928 \(Gallica\) \(Book\)
- Dawbarn, Charles: Joffre and his army, London 1916 \(Internet Archive\) \(Book\)
- Joffre, Joseph: Charleroi et la Marne, Paris 1938 \(Gallica\) \(Book\)
- Joffre, Joseph: Mémoires du maréchal Joffre \(1910-1917\), Paris 1932 \(Gallica\) \(Book\)
- Joseph Jacques Césaire Joffre, Légion d'Honneur, LH/1368/55 \(Archives Nationales\) \(Primary Source\)
- Recouly, Raymond: General Joffre and his battles, New York 1916 \(Internet Archive\) \(Book\)
- Unveiling of a statue of Joffre, France 1920s \(British Pathe\) \(Video\)

Metadata

Regional Section(s)

Western Europe > France

Thematic Section(s)

Violence

Subjects

Warfare and the military > Battles, battlefields and campaigns > Battles, battlefields and campaigns, Western Front

Warfare and the military > Command and control > Civil-military relations

Warfare and the military > Command and control > Officers

Warfare and the military > Military planning and recruitment > Strategies, military

Warfare and the military > Warfare, land > Maneuver warfare

Author Keywords

Battle of the Marne; Political-military relations; Mobilisation; Chantilly Conferences; Plan

XVII

GND Subject Headings

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire

LC Subject Headings

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire, 1852-1931

Rameau Subject Headings

Joffre, Joseph \(1852-1931\)

Key Person(s)

Sarrail, Maurice; Dubail, Augustin; Clemenceau, Georges; Millerand, Alexandre; Nivelle, Robert Georges; Briand, Aristide; Gallieni, Joseph-Simon

Key Location(s)

Rivesaltes; Verdun; Paris

Title

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire

Author(s)

Mathieu Panoryia

Article Type

Encyclopedic Entry

Classification Group

Persons