

Summerall, Charles Pelot

By Jared M. Tracy

Charles Pelot Summerall (1867-1955)

This portrait photograph shows General Charles Pelot Summerall in uniform and decorations. During World War I he commanded several American units and established a reputation of innovative, aggressive, and effective leadership.

Unknown photographer, black-and-white photograph, n.p., n.d.; source: The United States Army, http://www.usarpac.army.mil/history2/cg_summerall.asp.

Photo Courtesy of U.S. Army.

Summerall, Charles Pelot

American general, U.S. Army Chief of Staff

Born 04 March 1867 in Blounts Ferry, USA

Died 14 May 1955 in Washington, D.C., USA

Summary

U.S. Army Chief of Staff General Charles P. Summerall enjoyed a distinguished military career that spanned nearly forty years. During World War I he commanded several American units and established a reputation of innovative, aggressive, and effective leadership. After retiring in 1931, he served as the president of The Citadel in Charleston, SC.

Table of contents

1 Background

2 In the World War

3 Post-war Career

Notes

Selected Bibliography

Citation

Background

Born in Blounts Ferry, Florida on 4 March 1867, Charles Pelot Summerall (1867-1955) gained an avenue out of poverty when he graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1892. He joined the Infantry as a second lieutenant, though he soon transferred to the Artillery. By the end of the 19th century, Summerall had served with the 1st Infantry and the 5th Artillery in both California and at Fort Hamilton, New York; he had worked as an engineer officer and as an aide to the commander of the Department of the Gulf; and he had served in the Philippine Insurrection.

Summerall participated in the China Relief Expedition toward the end of the Boxer Rebellion, just prior to earning a promotion to captain and a new assignment to the 106th Coast Artillery Company in July 1901. He bounced from station to station until landing in a more lengthy position as senior artillery tactics instructor at West Point from 1905 to 1911. Promoted to major in 1911, he commanded artillery units in San Antonio, Texas, and at other Army and National Guard camps until 1914. Summerall climbed the ranks from lieutenant colonel in 1916 to brigadier general (National Army) by August 1917.

In the World War

General Summerall gained extensive combat and command experience during the First World War. He commanded the 67th and 1st Field Artillery Brigades in 1917. The following year he earned a promotion to major general in the National Army as he ascended from brigade to division (1st Division) to V Corps command while providing bold and inspiring leadership in operations in Catigny, Soissons, St. Mihiel, and the Meuse-Argonne. For example, as recounted in his Distinguished Service Cross citation, while commanding the 1st Division, Summerall visited the front lines of his division and personally reconnoitered the position despite taking heavy enemy fire. He encouraged his men to attack the town of Berzy-le-Sec, near Soissons, promising them strong artillery backing and encouraging them by his example. As a result of Summerall's "great courage and utter disregard for his own safety, the men of his division were inspired to enormous and heroic efforts, capturing Berzy-le-Sec the next morning [19 July 1918] under terrific enemy fire, and later in the day the division reached all its objectives.”¹

The general established a reputation as a farsighted yet aggressive officer, in large part due to his philosophy about and employment of artillery. To Summerall, artillery was a means to crush the enemy’s infantry, to be used close to the front and in tandem with American infantry. In contrast to the practice of using mass artillery bombardments lasting hours, days, or even weeks to “soften” the enemy prior to infantry assaults, he favored the use of rolling barrages, or heavy, concentrated artillery as direct support for mass infantry assaults. Summerall also demanded much from his subordinate officers, and drove his units ahead, despite heavy casualties. This occasionally made him the object of scorn and criticism. Many contemporaries and historians chastised Summerall as an egotistical glory-hunter for one action in particular, the “race to Sedan.” This “eleventh-hour” operation, involving his corps’ 1st Division, needlessly cost many American lives toward the end of the war. This incident, however, was just one blemish on his otherwise venerable combat career. Among his awards during the war, he earned the Distinguished Service Cross, the Army’s second highest award for valor, for his intrepidity in Soissons, and the Distinguished Service Medal for his cumulative experience in the war.

Post-war Career

General officer promotions followed after the Armistice. Summerall achieved the rank of major general in the Regular Army by mid-1920. His postwar commands included the 1st Division until 1921 and the Hawaiian Department until 1924. While serving in the latter position, Brigadier General William ‘Billy’ Mitchell \(1879-1936\) vociferously criticized Summerall for having inferior air defenses on the Hawaiian Islands. Possessing an outspoken bias against the aviator, Summerall testified as a witness against Mitchell in the latter’s court martial in late 1925. After commanding the VIII and II Corps areas from 1924 to 1926, Summerall served for four years as the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, earning a promotion to general in February 1929.

Retiring in March 1931 after almost forty years of continuous service, General Summerall served as president of The Citadel in Charleston, South Carolina from 1931 to 1953. He passed away on 14 May 1955. As a former U.S. Army Chief of Staff, Summerall received a Combined Services Full Honors Funeral, organized and supervised by Major General John H. Stokes, Jr. \(1895-1968\), Commanding General of the Washington Military District.

Jared M. Tracy, U.S. Army Special Operations Command

Notes

1. War Department: "General Orders #9: Distinguished Service Cross Citation for Major General Charles P. Summerall," 1923, available online, <http://projects.militarytimes.com/citations-medals-awards/recipient.php?recipientid=15698> (accessed 23 September 2014). ↑

Selected Bibliography

- Nenninger, Timothy K. \(ed.\): The way of duty, honor, country. The memoir of General Charles Pelot Summerall, Lexington, 2010: University Press of Kentucky.
- Nichols, W. Gary: General Charles P. Summerall. The training, command, and education of the citizen-soldier, in: Snell, Mark A. \(ed.\): Unknown soldiers. The American Expeditionary Forces in memory and remembrance, Kent 2008 Kent State University Press.

Citation

Jared M. Tracy: Summerall, Charles Pelot, in: 1914-1918-online. International Encyclopedia of the First World War, ed. by Ute Daniel, Peter Gatrell, Oliver Janz, Heather Jones, Jennifer D. Keene, Alan Kramer, and Bill Nasson, issued by Freie Universität Berlin, Berlin 2014-10-08. DOI: 10.15463/ie1418.10487

External Links

- Charles Pelot Summerall, General, United States Army \(Arlington National Cemetery\) \(Article\)
- Charles Pelot Summerall, Sr. \(Military Times\) \(Article\)
- Charles Pelot Summerall \(US Army Center of Military History\) \(Article\)
- General Charles P. Summerall, USA, Ret \(The Citadel\) \(Article\)

Metadata

Regional Section(s)

North America > USA

Thematic Section(s)

Violence

Subjects

Warfare and the military > Battles, battlefields and campaigns > Battles, battlefields and campaigns, Western Front

Warfare and the military > Combatants > Artillery

Warfare and the military > Combatants > Infantry

Warfare and the military > Command and control > Officers

Warfare and the military > Military planning and recruitment > Strategies, military

Author Keywords

Philippine Insurrection; Boxer Rebellion; American Expeditionary Forces; Chief of Staff; The Citadel

GND Subject Headings

Summerall, Charles Pelot

LC Subject Headings

Summerall, Charles Pelot, 1867-1955

Key Person(s)

John H. Stokes, Jr.; Mitchell, William

Key Location(s)

Berzy-le-Sec; Catigny; Fort Hamilton, New York; Saint-Mihiel; San Antonio; Soissons; Washington, D.C.; West Point

Title

Summerall, Charles Pelot

Author(s)

Jared M. Tracy

Article Type

Encyclopedic Entry

Classification Group

Persons